

Course BRIEF

THE PALM OIL TRADE has become more challenging, demanding and at times complex in the ever-changing current business environment. The advent of multiple trade agreements either on a regional or global level presents new opportunities and challenges. The international trade in Palm Oil does not only result in financial benefits but it also poses a number of commercial risks. Failure to recognise, address, manage and resolve some of these risks will ultimately result in irrecoverable losses, opportunity costs and expensive claims afflicting the industry.

Proper understanding, interpretation and management of these contracts are essential to minimize and avoid possible risks. Similarly, both inland and marine insurance of the goods in transit have to be adequately covered and claims properly made to overcome any financial risk or loss.

It is imperative that parties to a contract be made aware of their contractual rights, risks, obligations and responsibilities. A sound knowledge of such matters makes the difference between failure and success. You have the option to choose.

This talk will expose participants to the important survival skills to handle the situation as and when it arises particularly in a volatile market scenario when time is of the essence. Lessons will be learned on how to minimise and mitigate risks in a fast and changing trading environment.
